Water Resources Reference Room Dedication Scheduled for April 6

The dedication of the Arthur Maass-Gilbert F. White Water Resources Reference Room is scheduled to take place on April 6 from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in Room 143, downstairs in the Casey Building. Maj. Gen. Milton Hunter, Deputy Chief of the Corps will lead a small symposium of speakers honoring these two men. No other scholars in the 20th century had more influence on the Corps of Engineers water resources program. Mr. Maass criticized the Corps' cozy relationship with Congress in his 1951 book, Muddy Waters, and he led the Harvard team that wrote Design of Water Resource Systems, the book that created the foundation for the P&S and P&G. These books will be available in the Reference Room. Mr. White is considered the father of floodplain management; he advocated the equal consideration of non-structural measures since the late 1930s. He has worked with the Institute for Water Resources in the past, most recently during the National Drought Study and the Galloway Commission. These are truly two great Americans!

A videotape of the ceremony will be available to those who are unable to attend. This ceremony provides a chance to celebrate the origin of the fundamental principles that guided U.S. water resources development over the last 50+ years, with the added (and rare) opportunity to see these two distinguished scholars in the same forum. Additional papers and books, written by the duo, also are housed on the HECSA complex at the Corps' Office of History in the Kingman Building).
